FOR THE ALEXANDRIA DAILY GAZETTE

On reading MICHAEL LEIB'S Resolutions for a War with England.

Oh Leib, my very veins are running cold,
To see thou hast become of late so bold.
What, into raging battle wouldst thou plunge?
At England make a most confounded lunge?
Laugh'd at by wits, and hated by the good,
Thou vile Defrauder of the Orphan's blood;
Thou ev'ry thing of monkey but the tail—
Safe in the senate loudly canst thou rail;
But should a war ensue; and thou should'st hear
In thy pursuit a British grenadier
Was not a mile away, how wouldst thou tremble,
And run with panting heart and ten toes nimble.
Not with more direful twitchings wouldst thou start,
When Pearose prov'd thee, Leib,—just what thou art:
When in the hues of haggard horror drest,
The covert villain stood at once confest—
Yes, thou wouldst run:—thine inwards would descend,
And all thine inexpressibles offend.

FROM THE PARIS ARGUS.

LEGISLATIVE BODY.

Presidency of the count of the empire Fontanes

SEQUEL OF THE SITTING OF THE 11th DECEMBER.

The following is the statement of the situation of the empire, at the first of December 1809, such as it was read in the Legislative Body, by his excellency the Minister of the interior.

Works of Paris.

Paris becomes every day more worthy, by its monuments, of being the metropolis of one of those empires around which crowds in the history of time, every thing that was cotemporary.

At its skirts, the bridges of Bezous, of Choisy, and of Sevres, have just been began; that of Charenton has been re-established; that of St. Cloud is rebuilding. In its interior, the fine bridge of Jena, has been forwarded to the rising of the arches; that of St. Michael has been disembarrassed of the houses by which it was obstructed; the quay Napoleon and the quay of the Louvre have been terminated; that of Jena extends beyond the esplanade of the Invalides, the port of the Rapee is executing upon a grand scale.

Granaries of plenty are founded.

All the dispositions for the construction of an immense slaughter house are made near the barrier of Rochechouard; the ground is levelled, the foundation dug.

A provisional, but proper establishment, has received the exchange, until the moment when the magnificent edifice destined for it will be finished, and which is already raised above the ground.

Sciences, Letters, and Arts.

Every kind of encouragement is given to the sciences, letters and arts; honors, rewards, useful labors confined to artists who distinguish themselves, nothing is neglected. But the first of those memorable epochs calculated to exalt the most noble ambition is arrived: the decennial prizes are going to be given by the hand of him who is the source of all true glory; they would now be distributed if the jury had been able to deliver in their report sooner. His majesty was desirous that no sort of merit, whether literary, or belonging to the sciences or arts, should remain unrewarded. The decree of the 24th Fructidor, year 12, was looked upon by the emperor only as the expression of a general thought.—This thought has just received all its development by a late decree which augments the number of prizes. Fresh examens, fresh judgments are become necessary. The emperor wishes to be sure that they will be the expression of the enlightened public opinion, and in order to acquire that certainty he has ordered that the works honored by these judgments should undergo a solemn discussion; a distinction very flattering for those authors whose labors shall be judged worthy of such an illustration.

The Museum of natural history has been enlarged; that of the arts has received fresh riches by the acquisition of the master pieces of the Borghese gallery.

Agriculture.

The arts more intimately connected with the prosperity of nations naturally commanded a still more particular attention.—Agriculture is the first of all. The propagation of sheep with improved wool, has made a further progress, which is due in a great measure to the importations of Spanish and German flocks.

Twenty thousand select mares have been presented to the twelve hundred stallions which are already collected in our studs and in our depots. Premiums have been granted to the proprietors of the finest breeds.

The cultivation of cotton in our southern provinces has as yet given only hopes; they have not been destroyed by the two extraordinary seasons of 1808 and 1809; and this is having obtained a good deal.

Trials have been made to naturalize indigo.

But these are not the chief, the most essential of our agricultural productions;—other nations are in want of objects of the first necessity and procure them in exchange for the produce of their industry; France is too rich; she reaps in corn and wines far beyond her consumption; in wines of the first quality, was a thing long since acknowledged; but it was almost always looked upon as a certain fact, that we were dependent upon foreign countries for corn. How precious, therefore, must be for us the experience which we now have!

Some parts of the country suffer, it is true, from the impossibility of selling their corn; this is a momentary evil; but what a source of security for the future! Scarcities were for the most part due only to opinion; it was necessary only to enlighten opinion, and France, henceforth sure that she produces in corn beyond what she is able to consume, can no longer fear want.

The emperor has nevertheless, fixed all his solicitude upon the present circumstances; the exportation of corn is permitted by a great number of points of our land and sea frontiers, provided, however, the prices do not exceed in the neighboring markets determinate rates; the proprietors of Bordeaux wines receive loans; special authorisations facilitate maritime exportations.

The temple of glory occupies a great number of workmen: it will be worthy of its noble destination.

Four piles of masonry—works lined with a stone, equal in hardness and grain, to the finest marble, are waiting at the barrier of Neuilly for some of the last lays which are to receive the vault of the triumphal arch of the Etoile.

The column of Austerlitz is covered up to the half of its height, with bronzes which will eternize the feats of arms of our warriors.

The arch of the Caroviel now terminated, is a union of taste and magnificence.

The front of the monument in which you are seated is finishing; the Louvre unfolds fresh beauties in the rapid course of its restoration: the gallery which is to complete its union with the Thuilleries, astonishes, by its progress, even the inhabitants of this city.

The capital already enjoys a part of the waters which the canal of the Ourcq are to bring to it; the basin of the Villette and the fountain of the Innocents, afford to the city recreations as fine as they are useful.

In this long enumeration, I have been unable to point out more than the least part of the works finished or continued this year; but each of you have witnessed their developement, since there is no part of France to which they do not extend.

Among these grand constructions, there are some more particularly consecrated to public order and beneficence.

Establishments of benificence.

The emperor has ordered hitherto the creation of forty-two depots of mendicity: he has secured the funds necessary for their support. Thus will be healed by degrees one of the most hideous sores of polished states; thus public morals and industry would profit by a labor which will snatch from misfortune and depavity so many beings condemned in appearance to be unable to escape them. Several of these establishments have been put in activity.

His majesty has shed immense benefits upon those of his subjects to whom great calamities had befallen. The borders of the Rhine had been laid waste by inundations; the inhabitants have received nearly a million, either as indemnities, or to be employed in repairs and works of security. The countries which have suffered by the hail, and those which have experienced conflagrations, have obtained relief. An affecting and paternal care has allotted to a great number of cities, supplies of Jesuit's bark, which they have exactly received.

Depots of vaccine have just been established; they secure the families the certain means of never being without that inestimable preservative, which useful and real friends of humanity have made known throughout every class of our numerous population.

Among the wants of the French which have fixed the attention of the sovereign, the cultivation of the moral qualities, that of the mind and that of the arts of imagination, have continued to obtain one of the first ranks.

Public Instruction.

The Imperial University has entered upon its functions; it has collected information concerning all the schools in the empire. The academies are forming, the faculties are establishing; the Lyceums continue to furnish numerous scholars to the Politecnic school and to that of St. Cyr.—The former is still a nursery of young men distinguished by their knowledge and their conduct; at St. Cyr, are continually renewing those youths as strong and as well exercised as they are courageous and devoted, who shew themselves, upon arriving under their colors, to be worthy of marching with the ancient brave fellows.

Manufactures and Industry.

Industry augments by workmanship, the value of raw materials, and often in proportions which may be said to be infinite. It has constantly occupied the thoughts of the governments; but here the action of authority cannot be direct; to give encouragements, to study modifications in the tarifs of custom houses, whether national or foreign, is what it can do, and what it has done. It has moreover watched with redoubled care over the school of arts and trades at Chalons, the good effects of which continue to be sensibly felt.

Mr. Richard, Messrs. Turneaux, Mr. Oberkampf, Mr. de Neuflize, and so many others have preserved to their precious establishments a degree of activity, an organization, and means of improvement which render them worthy of being mentioned: they do honor to the nation and contribute to its prosperity.

Mines.

Mines conceal riches which would remain buried were it not for industry. A legislation of the mines, positive and clear, will be completed in the course of your session; means of reaping the most immediate fruits of them are prepared. France possess a great number of precious coal mines, which secure us from all apprehensions of ever being in want of fuel.

Copper, lead and silver mines are working; others are the objects of researches and experiments.

Commerce.

Commerce applies itself in general to availing itself as much as possible of the produce of agriculture and industry; ours suffers no doubt by the extraordinary state, which, making as it were two masses, the one of the continent of Europe, the other of the seas and the countries from which it separates us, leave them without any possible communication. Nevertheless the internal consumption, in which a much greater number of individuals participate, since ease is known by classes of the people who were heretofore ignorant of it, and our relations with our neighbors, keep up a great activity in the exchanges. Our relations with the United States are suspended; but being formed by mutual wants, they will soon resume their course. Lyons sees renewing the prosperity of her manufactories, which receive the orders of Germany, of Russia and of the interior. Naples supplies us with cotton, which its soil produces every day in greater abundance; and which diminishes the quantity of foreign importations.

Finances.

The connection of trade with public credit will naturally call your attention to a phenomenon which strikes us less at present, because every year reproduces it; the punctuality of all the payments without any fresh contributions, without any loans, without any anticipations, and in the midst of a war for which, at any other time, the most extraordinary efforts would have appeared below what such enterprises required; an admirable effect of the simplicity of the springs and movements, of a rigorous order and of the exactness of the calculations; into the details of which his majesty himself does not disdain to enter.

The terrier is carrying on; the fruits of it are reaped in a great number of cantons and communes; we shall soon be indebted to it for the general improvement of the system of the land tax, and the just proportion of the contributions with the products.

Internal administration and Justice.

The internal administration has followed the same course in 1809 as in the preceding years; order and tranquility have been maintained, justice has been speedily and equitably administered; the name of the emperor has been blessed in all families, joyful at the internal peace.

The departments of Tuscany have received the benefit of the general organization.

TO THE PUBLIC.

THE subscriber, after a lapse of time necessarily consumed in the preparation of his house, respectfully announces to the citizens of Alexandria, as well as the community at large, that he has taken for a term of years that noted and eligible establishment known by the name of the CITY HOTEL, and once occupied by Mr. Gadsby, whose distinguished abilities as a Publican gave it an eclat which the subscriber hopes to preserve by his unremitted exertions in affording to all those who may confer on him the favor of their patronage, genteel and comfortable accommodations. The subscriber deems it unnecessary to indicate the multiplicity of conveniences attached to the City Hotel, and will only submit a description to that portion of travellers who have so generally attested its numerous advantages.

Alexandria Daily Gazette.

THURSDAY, MARCH 15.

In the debate in the House of Representatives of the United States, March 13—Upon the question for postponing the decision upon the resolution for adjourning Congress on the 2d of April next—It was contended by Mr. Smilie and others, that it was improper to come to any decision upon the question of adjournment until information was received from Europe, particularly from England, relative to our relations with that country—that Congress were wholly unable to tell what steps were necessary to be taken. Mr. Livermore in reply, observed, that he was astonished to hear the observations from the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania. Have not gentlemen told us that the information received from that country was perfectly satisfactory—that there was no difficulty whatever to be apprehended with that nation—that every thing would be settled according to their wishes?—Have you not got a SUMMARY? [Alluding to a summary said to have been given by the secretary of state of secret dispatches from Mr. Pinkney.] What can gentlemen want more than this SUMMARY, which they say is so completely satisfactory?—Taking it for granted, that this summary is correct, and that the gentlemen have been sincere—we want no further information from England—And as to France, we must continue the session through the year, even to the third of March next, and have it permanent—if it is necessary to have more favorable information from that country before Congress can adjourn.

The unfortunate disagreement of the two branches of the legislature relative to the repeal of the non-intercourse, renders it necessary that Congress should speedily adjourn, and put an end to that destructive measure—and the sooner a decision is had, the more for the public welfare.

The people ought to know how long they will be compelled to bear this unnecessary burthen—They ought at least to be informed at what time they shall be relieved. And it is of infinitely more importance to them to have the information than any business Congress will be likely to do at this session.

The State of the Country.— Having examined into the situation of our affairs as they relate to Great Britain, we now inquire, whether the country has gained any advantages by the election of Mr. Jefferson, as it respects our relations with France?

It must be acknowledged, that our administration, since Mr. Jefferson's election, have not troubled France with any very boisterous official complaints. On that subject, except when driven into an opposite course by public opinion, their remonstrances have been mild and gentle, much more becoming the offending than the offended party. But, the sufferings of the nation have been sufficiently severe, and accumulated.

The French government, thoroughly understanding Mr. Jefferson's character, & the blind devotion of a large portion of the people of the United States to his views, have conducted towards us in just such a manner, as would subserve their own interests, and most thoroughly humble and debase us. In pursuance of this plan, they have been for many years, almost incessantly engaged in making depredations upon our commerce, in robbing and destroying our merchantmen, and in capturing our seamen, and in confining them in dungeons. Whenever the gentle remonstrances of our government, have been suffered, through the tuneful pipe of Mr. Armstrong, to reach the high and mighty ear of his imperial and royal majesty, they have been set to an melodious a note, as a love song, or a madrigal; and if we may be allowed to judge from the style of the few morsels of his letters which have been at any time ushered to the public view, our minister has performed what little duty he has done at all.

Under the French decrees, a system of warfare upon our commerce has been carried on, and to an immense extent, which would disgrace the age of pirates, and buccaniers. With a treaty existing between us and France, every position of it that stands in the way of any project, of which the tyrant of Europe may please to be in the pursuit, is set at nought, or trampled under foot, with every circumstance of insolence and disdain. Property to an incredible amount, has, by French decrees, and French piracies, been plundered from our merchants, and no pretence of satisfaction is uttered by that government.—This disgraceful and ruinous state of things has been, and is still submitted to by our administration, with the most submissive meekness. If they even venture on a complaint, if they at any time muster resolution enough to risk a remonstrance, the terms are so mean and abject, as to excite in the mind of Bonaparte, no other sentiment than that of contempt. In this way, our national character has been degraded, and our respectability destroyed. We appear, and we must ever appear to other countries, as a nation of cowards, fit only to be traduced, trampled upon, and enslaved.

Was this the fact under the federal administrations? Although under the administration of Gen. Washington, we had but just started in the national career, our reputation abroad was respectable, and our importance daily increasing. The governments of Europe knew that he had too much courage, too much honor, too much dignity, and too much patriotism, to submit tamely to aggression, and insult, and of course, the treatment we received from them was such as they ever pay to a nation that has the spirit to defend its rights and character.

During the presidency of Mr. Adams, among the many evils which the nation experienced, the course of conduct pursued towards France, was highly meritorious. The abrogation of the French treaty, and the equipment of our small navy, are acts which reflect great honor on the U. States. The brilliant exploits of some of our armed ships, under Truxton, &c. soon taught the arrogant rulers of France, that we were not to be trifled with, and insulted and plundered with impunity, and their haughty conduct was soon changed into an appearance at least of more decency and justice. Had the same spirit of resistance to that overbearing and profligate government been continued, millions of property would have been saved to our merchants, a vast sum, of course, would have been added to the national revenue, trade would in a great degree have been freed from its disgraceful and ruinous embarrassments, the fatal and shameful experiments of embargo and non-intercourse, would not have been resorted to, and the weakness and dastardliness of our government, would not have been exposed to the whole world, and we should have stood at the present moment on a high and commanding station, among the nations of the earth.

But what is the fact? The total reverse. We have no respectability abroad. We have courted France to despise us; and we have taught Great Britain that she can not only live, but flourish without us. The miserable, ridiculous system of starvation, which has operated exclusively on ourselves after having brought us to the very verge of national & individual bankruptcy, seems to be abandoned by almost the whole of its old friends and fathers. The fate which has betided Mr. Macon's bill, this session, has brought it to the brink of the grave.

What has the nation gained from Mr. Jefferson, on the subject of French relations?

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, March 14.

[Taken for the Alexandria Gazette.]

Mr. Holland, from the committee to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill giving further compensation to the witnesses who attended the trial of Aaron Burr, before the court of the U. States for the district of Virginia.

Mr. Johnson, from the committee of claims, reported a bill for the relief of Moses Young. Referred to a committee of the whole house and made the order of the day for Friday next.

Also a bill for the relief of John Thompson. Referred to a committee of the whole and made the order for Friday.

Mr. Stanford offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the post-master-general be directed to lay before this house an estimate of the annual expenses of conveying the mail from Washington city thro' Athens in Georgia to New Orleans, together with the proceeds of the same since its establishment, distinguishing between the different parts of the route. Mr. Lyon offered the following amendment: "And also what is the amount of postage of letters carried on said route."

The resolution with the amendment of Mr. Lyon was adopted.

The house resumed the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday, (the post-office bill.) Mr. Alston's motion for striking out the section allowing to the deputy post master at Washington one thousand dollars in addition to his commissions, still under consideration.

The question on this motion was negatived.

After some amendments were made, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time to-morrow.

On motion of Mr. Poindexter, the house resolved itself into committee of the whole, Mr. BASSETT in the chair, on the bill providing for ascertaining the title to the batture in New Orleans.

Mr. Bibb moved to strike out the whole of the bill from the enacting clause; and to amend it by inserting two new sections, the same in substance as the resolutions moved by him some days since on this subject.

Mr. Bibb spoke in favor of his amendment.

Mr. Sheffey opposed it.

Mr. Poyarass read a speech relative to the subject. The committee rose reported progress and had leave to sit again.

Adjourned.

From the Freeman's Journal.

Messrs. M'Corkle & Elliot,

Your giving the following a place in your columns will shew that you can feel for

MY TOES.

Me heartless Winter cannot please,
Attended by its hoary snows;
For I am fearful lest they freeze
My Toes.

'Tis true, when Spring's soft showers descend,
They'll wet and penetrate the clothes;
But Winter, that may put an end
To Toes.

Who would the snow clad pathway brave,
Prefer the loss of these to those;
Nor with his wardrobe part to save
His Toes.

Our wardrobe we can soon regruit,
But only let them once be froze,
We can't procure another suit
Of Toes.

Then Winter fly, that cannot feel,
Nor one soft touch of pity knows;
But like a silent thief would steal
My Toes.

Come Spring, and let thy fragrant dews
Their lovely, balmy sweets disclose;
I'll hail their charms, nor fear to lose
My Toes.

'Till Winter, like a furious Pard,
O'er earth again her dangers throws;
Then shall it be my care to guard
My Toes.
